Coastal crisis

Thousands willing to risk death at sea

By Matthew Elliott

Detention centres are bursting at the seams as more African immigrants arrive on the shores of Malaga Province than ever before. Some police stations have become makeshift migrant camps after more than 100 people were rescued in the first few days of 2017.

Coastguards rescued 102 people in Malaga waters from January 1-3, with 64 taken to safety from two boats off the Costa Tropical and transported to the Port of Motril.

During 2016 a total of 773 immigrants made it to Malaga, more than triple the 207 who landed in 2015. At the height of the crisis in 2013 just 16 people made it.

Across Andalucia coastguards rescued an unprecedented 258 people in just the first 72 hours of 2017.

In 2016, a record 6.099 immigrants docked across Andalucia, more than all the other Spanish regions combined.

Many of the immigrants who have landed in recent days will simply be released. Strict Spanish laws mean it is illegal to hold people without cause for more than 72 hours.

The 'Foreigner's Centres' cannot take any more pressure, meaning many are let go without much more than a cursory paperwork check. Spain promised to make room for 18,000 people but in reality there is little space left and the Costa will have to bear the

Due to large scale surveillance and the tourist population, Malaga has typically been avoided by human traffickers who favour the quieter Cadiz and Almeria coastlines. But wars and turmoil south of the Sahara desert, plus growing greed among the various mafia-like gangs, has led to a devil-may-care-attitude.

Thousands of people, chiefly young men looking for work, are willing to pay their life savings to make the perilous journey. Joining the more than 4,000 people who drowned sailing the Mediterranean last year is a risk they are willing to take, even knowing full well that they will probably be caught upon

The Axarquia Al Limite challenge, which is raising funds for AVOI, a charity which trains volunteers to assist children with cancer, went as planned until the final stage, a nighttime climb up La Maroma, the highest mountain in the area.

De la Cruz explained on the challenge website the following day: "The mountain beat us. On our climb, I felt ill and dizzy. We decided to stop and, much to my regret and with tears in my eyes, start back down to Canillas. #### ONLINE VOTING: There have been calls to have this option for the 2020 general election.

IT had to happen but there can't be many of us who ever thought it would.

In the world's most advanced democracy there appears to be evidence of cyber groups entering the electoral fray in an attempt to influence the outcome.

Thirty-five Russian diplomats and their families ended up packing their belongings in a hurry and leaving the US. They were given just 72 hours to get out of town.

President Obama ordered the expulsions in retaliation for attempts to hack the US Democratic Party and Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign. Hacking, American security officials say, that was carried out by statesponsored players and the state was Russia.

Will Donald Trump allow those self-same diplomats back? It's hard to believe that he would. But the issue of cyber attackers attempting to influence an actual election seems to have caught everyone by surprise. There was always a feeling that such groups may be capable of stealing millions of dollars/ euros/pounds in elaborate viral raids, but getting involved in hacking an election? That seemed to be a step too far.

In the US the question has been asked: was Hillary Clinton's defeat in states that used electronic voting real, or could hackers have been at work?

Perhaps the question should have been: how is it that anyone really thought they'd be able to keep these groups out?

The stubby pencil and piece of paper that you put your cross on in the ballot box is actually more secure than anything which is electronic."

Did the 'experts' think the hackers are only interested in money and stealing the millions of private identity files kept by such giants as

This threat to the voting systems of advanced democracies will not go away even if we employ fingerprint scanners, iris scanners and all the other bio-security measures under the sun.

Which brings us back to the humble polling booth, a piece of paper with the names of the candidates on it and your common or garden pencil to make your mark.

The former head of MI6 has now entered the fray: a man who surely knows better than most just what the hackers can do.

Sir John Sawers doesn't say voting by your phone or computer shouldn't be part of the future when it comes to exercising your democratic rights. But in an interview with the BBC he says: "The more things that go online, the more susceptible you are to cyber attacks."

When the American computer expert Edward Snowden fled the West and went to Russia, it was revealed the US National Security Agency collects information on something like one billion people. If it is true the mind boggles. And the collection of all that information involves fair means and foul. Everybody knew it, but to say it in public was another thing.

In the UK there has already been one call for online voting to be an option for everyone in time for the general election in 2020. That's not very far off. It would be naive to think the UK doesn't have the sort of enemies who'd like to throw a spanner in that works. Which brings us to the alternative: paper and pencil.

There have been issues of vote rigging and ballot box fraud in the UK but they have always been extremely limited and the culprits have usually been swiftly stamped on.

As Sawers says "the stubby pencil and piece of paper that you put your cross on in the ballot box is actually much more secure than anything which is electronic."

Perhaps this is one area where the incessant rush to embrace all things technological should be reined in. An election in which the hackers are found to have played a part, even if a very small one, would send shockwaves round the

It may sound old fashioned to say, but "if it ain't broke, don't fix it." There isn't very much about the world of politics at the moment that endears it to its electorates, particularly those, like the UK, that aren't forced by law to vote or face a penalty. Leaving us with the feeling we're participating in a process that's at least democratic, by trailing to the polling booth and making your mark, even if you're not happy about the outcome, isn't too much to ask is it?

A total of 47 people, both Spanish and foreign citizens were apprehended.

The racket involved the use of two fake companies which were set up with fraudulent contracts for non-existent employees. They would then collect social security contributions from the state ranging from €250 to €500 per worker.

With more than 50 'employees' pretending to have worked almost 14,000 days, the fraudsters charged the state iust over €534.000 in contributions.

Police believe they have captured all of the orchestrators, who are charged with public fraud and falsifying documents. Both 'companies' are also believed to have helped regularise the working situation of foreign nationals by illegal means.

Statue vandals

POLICE have caught several vouths who were responsible for vandalising the pedestal and bust of Pepe Matias in the Pepe Matias el Pozuelo park last Tuesday.

The incident was reported at 10.47pm when police received a call stating that a number of young boys on bicycles, one of whom was wearing a red jacket, were hitting the statue and trying to pull it down.

Responding to the call, police found that the pedestal had been knocked down and that bust was missing. They spoke to two young men who said that the culprits had thrown the bust amongst the trees and left in the direction of Hotel Playacalida.

Police later found three young men, matching the description given in the call, outside a pharmacy on Paseo de Velilla, aged 16, 14 and 17. After speaking to the boys, it emerged that a fourth youth was also involved.

The bust was later located within the park.

OUR VIEW

A New Year hope

IT seems that 2016 has been an incredibly bad year for the death of musicians and celebrities around the world and every loss has been very painful for their fans.

For some reason, musicians appear to attract the loyalist fans and this past year has seen some real heroes pass on, although they leave the legacy of their music as well as a good potential for new profit for their record companies.

What we sometimes overlook is that the death of every person be they famous or unheard of invariably leaves grieving relatives and a hole in a family dvnamic.

All death is difficult to cope with, but sudden and unexpected death is in many ways the most difficult for the family to handle whilst those who die from long and painful illnesses are often considered to have had a merciful release despite the fact that the family will mourn their passing.

As 2016 dies and 2017 is born, we hope the world will become a safer place and death whilst inevitable will not suddenly strike indiscriminately and the massacre of so many innocents in Syria and Yemen will come to an end so people can return to their normal lives and enjoy a peaceful period with their families.

At the end of the day, there is little any of us can do to resolve these dreadful situations but sometimes we just need to count our blessings as life here in Spain continues to be safe and mainly comfortable.

PARADE EVENT: The Three Kings will be accompanied by a giant Chinese dragon and a fire engine.

Three Kings float by

By Eleanor Hawkins

THE Three Kings (or three wise men) will be stopping off in La Herradura this afternoon, Thursday 5, to bring gifts and sweets to local children.

A parade, with six floats bearing the kings and pages, will set off from the covered sports centre at 5pm accompanied by a giant Chinese dragon and a fire engine.

Dancers and musicians from Solange Jansenns, Pura Danza, Sabor Andaluz and the municipal music workshop will be taking part in the parade to provide entertainment while those on the floats will, in keeping with tradition, hurl hundreds of kilos of sweets into the crowd.

The parade will head along the seafront promenade, turning up Avenida Prieto Moreno and continuing along Calle Acerca del Pilar before returning to the beachfront. Once they reach Calle Alhambra, the floats and crowds will head up to Plaza de la Independencia, where the wise men will distribute gifts and prizes from the stage.

MAYOR HERRERA LORENTE: Handed over New Year's gifts to emergency service workers.

Mayor makes New Year visits

THIS New Year's Eve, the mayor of Almuencar, Trinidad Herrera Lorente, surprised workers of fire, police and health services with a visit in order to celebrate the festivities.

Trinidad Herrera Lorente. accompanied by staff from her cabinet, started her visit at the local fire headquarters where she received an insight into the daily work of those on duty and handed over a specially prepared gift to celebrate the start of 2017. Firefighters were surprised and delighted to receive a visit from the mayor and wished her a happy New Year.

Next was the emergency health centre where health workers told her that, despite the empty waiting room, staff were anticipating an influx from those living nearby. Those working thanked the mayor for her visit and gift.

Most surprised by Ms Herrera Lorente's visit though, were those on duty at the Local Police headquarters. The mayor took time to look at the good work they carried out and celebrate the festivities before leaving them too with a gift.

Home truths from Civil Service leader

BREXIT PAGE

By John Smith

CIVIL SERVANTS in the UK who are not allowed to speak directly to members of the press on personal matters were less than pleased when the Prime Minister criticised them in early December.

She took the opportunity in an article written for The Spectator magazine to complain that senior civil servants didn't brief ministers adequately and had a tendency to say what they thought their minister's wanted to hear rather than give them an accurate summary of events.

In this article she made it clear that she wanted to know facts as well as opinions and then she and other politicians could make the actual decisions

Now however David Penman general secretary of the FDA union (formerly The Association of First Division Civil Servants) has spoken out to alert Mrs May to what the bulk of his 19,000 members are thinking with regards to Brexit.

He believes that the prime minister has decided to pretend that there will be no significant problems with handling Britain's exit from the European Union when the fact of the matter, as far as his union is concerned, is that the staff won't be able to cope.

Mr Penman added that anyone who had the audacity to warn that the timing would be long and complex was vilified by the government and accused of ignoring the wishes of the people.

According to the union supremo only two ministries have received additional staffing whilst all of the others were being left to cope with implementing all of the legal requirements of Brexit without any additional resource.

In his opinion, and that of his members who are the most senior civil servants, the government is going to have to postpone a number of its new initiatives and plans if it wishes to complete the Brexit operation within two years.

The fact is that the Home Office is going to have to implement 1,200 EU laws which will become British law and Defra (The Department for Environment Food & Rural Affairs) which manages Britain's farmers and fishing fleets will have to handle 400 new laws and explain their contents to users who will suddenly lose a number of grants.

Although not a civil servant, Mr Penman seems quite prepared to pass on apparently unpalatable truths to the prime minister who may have preferred that she and the country at large had not heard them!

Malaga City plans to combat climate change

MALAGA is set to align itself with environmentally friendly cities such as Quebec and Copenhagen in the war against global warming with a range of proposals designed to reduce greenhouse gases by 40 per cent by 2030.

The city was last year one of the signatories of a policy which brings together local and regional bodies to implement EU targets on energy and climate. Malaga is vulnerable to the effects of climate change, with the local climate predicted to rise by four degrees by the end of this century if no steps are taken.

Proposals to combat environmental change include the implementation of electric motorcycles for police. Within the next several months, a section of the police force's vehicles will be replaced with electric motorbikes, which are not only healthier for the environment but will also be capable of collecting data on noise and other pollution around the city.

Further measures include the use of 'green' roofs in the construction of new buildings. The proposal will see roofs of new buildings insulated with plants that thrive in a Mediterranean environment, such as rosemary, lavender and olivilla. More CO<sub>2</sub>-absorbing trees will also be planted around the city.

Large companies are also doing their part. For some time, gas from landfill waste has been harnessed by biogas company, Limasa, but only recently has a solution been created that allows gas to be extracted from waste before being sealed in landfill. This alone last year produced 24.4 million kilowatt-hours.

Malaga Town Hall has been working on this new policy since last June and their ultimate goal is to achieve zero emissions by 2050.

Three vehicles burned earlier in December were joined on the last night of the year by two parked outside the Usos Multiples municipal building in the early hours.

One, a white Seat Ibiza, belonged to the local spokesman for Izquierda Unida, Gerardo Apontes, while the other, a Peugeot 206, was his mother's.

Although quick work on the part of the provincial firefighter's consortium avoided the cars being completely burned out, both still suffered a lot of damage, the politician reported the next day.

Apontes and the PSOE opposition party have urged local mayor Abdeslam Lucena to up surveillance in the streets of the village following the wave of fires targeting parked cars.

However, this is simply impossible, the mayor said, as there are only three Local Police officers in the village and they are physically unable to cover the whole area.

Lucena reported that the Guardia Civil is investigating the fires and is attempting to track down a suspicious vehicle seen driving round the area a number of times minutes before the fire broke out.

Motril mayor traffic ban reversal

THE mayor of Motril Flor Almón Fernández has reacted very quickly to complaints received from shopkeepers in the centre of Motril concerning a ban on traffic.

It was on Thursday December 22, 2016 that a decision was made to restrict traffic during commercial hours, except for residents (people who live in the area, merchants and access to garages) as well as public services.

Just one week later, on Thursday December 29, the mayor received a complaint that 90 per cent of the shopkeepers within the area affected by the traffic restrictions had requested that the ban be temporarily lifted due to the loss of sales in they had experienced in that week.

The mayor, acting within the powers in her possession immediately decided to accede to their request and temporarily lifted the ban except for any closures due to town Christmas celebrations which had already been planned.

In taking this decision, the mayor recognised the importance of good relationships with those adversely affected and the fact that their commercial contribution is important to Motril.

British residents in Spain awarded honours by Her Majesty The Queen in New Year Honours List 2017

TWO British residents in Spain have been awarded honours by Her Majesty The Queen in the New Year Honours List 2017.

Liz Parry, former Editor of SUR in English, an Englishlanguage newspaper in Southern Spain, and resident in the province of Malaga, has been awarded the British Empire Medal (BEM) for her services to British nationals living in Andalucia

Roger Cooke, latterly President of the British Chamber of Commerce in Spain and resident in Madrid, has been appointed a Member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (MBE) for his services to British business in Spain and British-Spanish trade and investment.

Honours lists are published twice a year, on the Oueen's official birthday in June and at New Year, and recognise extraordinary achievement and service to the UK. Following a nomination process, an honours committee reviews all the submitted nominations. The Oueen then awards the honour.

In the cases of Ms Parry and Mr Cooke, their outstanding achievements ensured they stood out amongst the many nominations received for this year's New Year Honours list.

The British Ambassador to Spain, Simon Manley, said: "I am delighted that the achievements of Liz Parry and Roger Cooke have been recognised by Her Majesty The Queen in this way, whether it be Liz through her distinguished journalism and consistent promotion of Britons' integration into Spanish society, or Roger and his leadership of the British Chamber, our principal partner in strengthening a €46 billion bilateral commercial relationship."

Reacting to the news of her award, Liz Parry said: "I am delighted and proud to have been awarded this medal for service to British residents in our international community! It came as a complete surprise and I don't know who nominated me, but I would like them to know that I am honoured and grateful."

Roger Cooke, similarly surprised, said: "I am delighted to receive this award and that a contribution to Anglo-Spanish trade has been recognised at a time when this is so important to both countries' economic

Lux Mundi carol service

THE Lux Mundi, Torre del Mar Ecumenical carol service was held on Saturday December 17 in the Parish Church of San Andres in Torre del Mar, where Christians from different traditions, friends and residents in Axarquia, came together to pray and enjoy the traditional carols.

The prayers were led by the Reverend James Taylor from the Spanish Episcopal Reformed Church, Reverend Jorgen Christian Madsen from the Danish Church and Don Miguel Angel Alonso Oliva parish priest from the Catholic Church.

Readings were given by various members of the congregation and the carols were performed by the Spanish choir 'Amigos de Lux Mundi,' director Julio Bautista, the German choir 'Con was raised and helped purchase gifts for children and help needy families.

It was a most enjoyable service, with the congregation joining in the various carols, the words of which were displayed on the large screen at the sides of the church, and during the service members of the congregation placing small symbols of the important pieces of the nativity story on the alter steps.

After the service many friends went back to the Lux Mundi Centre to enjoy a buffet and drinks and of course more carol singing.

Lux Mundi give thanks to all who supported the event and gave generously to support the local Caritas. Funds of €528.22 were raised enabling them to purchase gifts for the children and help the needy families over Christmas.

January lectures for Nerja DFAS

LECTURE 1: The Ashcan School and American Real-

The Ashcan School was an artistic movement in the United States during the early 20th century that is best known for works portraying scenes of daily life in New York, often in the city's poorer neighbourhoods.

A maverick group of young painters in NYC, inspired by the realism of Dutch 17th century artists and the influence of 19th century French artists such as Courbet and Manet, set the foundation for depicting the sheer variety and scale of life in the changing, surging metropo-

Subject matter included leisure activities such as shopping and entertainment, immigrants arriving in the tenements on the Lower East side, playing and recreation in Central Park and swimming at Coney Island.

The Ashcan group wanted above all for emerging American artists to find a voice for 'their own art in PAPERWORK: Make sure you follow the correct procedures.

Register a vehicle in Spain correctly

REGISTERING a non-Spanish vehicle in Spain is a complex and potentially costly procedure. However, you may be exempt from Spanish registration tax by getting Spanish number plates within one month of entering the country. But to do this, you need to become a resident. Linea Directa has been insuring expat drivers in Spain for over a decade and understands all the steps involved. Below we outline this process.

STEP 1: OBTAINING A CERTIFICATE OF CONFORMITY

This is a statement by the car's manufacturer that it conforms to EU regulations. You will need the car's chassis number to complete this straightforward process online at www.euro coc.eu/en/certificate_of_conformity. The charges for this service will vary according to type of vehicle, make and country of first registration.

STEP 2: CURRENT LOG BOOK

The vehicle's original log book showing your name as the owner, the vehicle's age and a valid UK address. You will also need the bill of sale for the car.

STEP 3: RESIDENCY IN SPAIN

The Spanish residency certificate (Certificado de Empadronamiento) is your official proof of residency in Spain. Your local town hall can provide you with this document. You will need to take your passport and proof of Spanish address (rental contract, contract to purchase or property deeds).

STEP 4: OBTAINING A SPANISH MOT CERTIFICATE

All vehicles over four years old must be roadworthy and clearly display a valid ITV sticker. The ITV (Vehicle Technical Inspection) must be tested at an authorised centre, just as for an MOT test. You can find out the location of your nearest ITV centre on DGT website (equivalent to the DVLA). You can also call your local centre to make a booking. If the centre is busy, especially pre-summer, this can save a lot of time. The cost can vary but generally is around 40€ for petrol-engine cars and 56€ for diesel-engine cars.

Step 5: OBTAINING A SPANISH EQUIVALENT OF A TAX DISC

The Spanish Tax Agency can provide your vehicle with a valid 'tax disc' for Spain, which must be carried in the car when in use. You will need to complete the relevant form online and pay the amount according to your car's tax band.

You can carry out all these procedures yourself or you can seek the assistance of an accountant to do this for you.

Salaries should be reduced

By John Smith

IN A newly published research document from the Lancaster University Management School, the link between salaries and bonuses paid to company directors and a company's financial performance in the UK is described as being 'negligible.'

Salaries of these executives have increased by an average of 82 per cent during the past 11 years although return on capital increased by just 1 per cent!

£1.9 billion (€2.23 billion)

is the average salary of a CEO of a stock market quoted company in the UK.

In November of this year, Prime Minister Theresa May said that it planned to make companies explain as well as justify large salaries for their executives and at one stage, it was suggested that she would also encourage worker participation on company boards although this seems to have been diluted recently.

To some extent, having discovered that UK company directors' pay can be as much as 50 per cent more than their European counterparts, corporate investors and shareholders are not waiting for the government to act and have already rejected pay rises for executives in Anglo American, BP and Smith & Nephew with more expected in the future.

One well-respected investment manager has criticised the greed of company executives, accusing many of them for helping to cause the financial crisis, but still acting as if they had a divine right to increase their salaries whilst planning to reduce staff or their

Expansion trail for BP

The deal is Woolworth's which will then allow it to team up with the supermarket to trial 200 convenience stores at the new stations in a strategy that has worked well in the UK, where with partner Marks and Spencer both companies have seen an increase in turnover.

Spain grabs tax from Monaco

James Rodriguez was sold to Real Madrid.

By John Smith

THE Football Leaks release of information continues with news that French football team Monaco has had to agree to pay a large amount of tax to the Spanish government based on profits from transfers.

According to the official view of the Spanish government, Monaco is considered to be a tax haven and as such levies 19 per cent tax on any profit made from the sale of anything (including people) into Spain.

It appears therefore that the total amount involved comes to €11.7 million based on the purchase and sale of Colombian Captain James Rodriguez who they bought from Porto for €45 million and then sold to Real Madrid for a reported €80 million just one year later.

Also adding to the financial pot were profits on the sale of Belgian player Yannick Carrasco to Atletico Madrid and the Tunisian Aymen Abdennour to

Workers beware of the chatbot

ACCORDING to Barcelona development company Inbenta, by 2020, there are unlikely to be any more call centres manned by humans as all such jobs will be taken by chatbots.

The word is short for chat robot, a computer program that simulates human conversation, or chat, through artificial intelligence. Although at the moment, chatbots used for these purposes are typically limited to conversations regarding a specialised purpose, so the ability of the chatbot will expand with it.

We are in the midst of volatile times

WITH the UK electing to leave the EU, Matteo Renzi's crushing referendum defeat in the Italian referendum and the ECB choosing to expand its QE programme, we are in the midst of volatile times

Seeing ranges between 1.10 and 1.20 over the last quarter, the market has clearly reacted heavily to the political turmoil erupting throughout Europe, On June 23, the UK announced a majority vote in favour of leaving the EU - on this day we saw a high of 1.30 before plummeting over 10 per cent within the two weeks that followed.

A lot of speculation has followed... will the pound recover before the year is out? Where will it be trading against the majors next year in comparison to where it has been? Will it fall further?

The truth is, there is such a lack of reliable information available and so much contradiction that it's been nigh impossible for any establishment to forecast a market analysis that isn't partial to remaining fairly vague.

ROCKY END: To 2016, with little visibility into the future currency prices.

As of yet, it looks like we'll be sitting on our hands until March 2017 when Article 50 is (supposedly) finally going to be triggered in order for Britain to leave the EU in March 2019, immediately ahead of the next European Parliament elections. For now, the key focus has been hedg-ing any potential further threat that lies within these plans for the future.

In terms of the ECB, they've made the decision to scale down its monthly purchases from €80bn to €60bn to ensure policy continuity, sending a clear signal there is a limit to how far the ECB's Quantitative Easing programme can run and how high their balance sheet can grow beyond 2017, before it runs into hard technical and political constraints. They've effectively chosen to pump more money into the Eurozone economy until the end of next year, and longer if needed while maintaining a steady and controlled approach by lessening the monthly amounts and extended the overall time-scale of the plan.

The prospects of tapered monthly purchases and lower-for-longer negative yields means the ECB's reflation channels have shifted in favour of a weaker euro and higher equity markets, with negative discount rates and a cheaper exchange rate. I think it's safe to say that the ECB are certainly looking to take a short-term currency hit while focusing on their long-term plan to improve the state of the Eurozone economy which we could expect to see beginning to reflect going into 2018, should everything go to plan.

With that all said, it's going to be a rocky end to 2016 with little visibility into the future currency prices until at least Q1 2017 on the majors - Hence all of the corporate risk hedging. We stand to see The Bank of England looking further into inflation, tension between EU members and retaliation to the threat of terrorism.

Be ready for another big year.

US law firms accused of poor cyber security

By John Smith

WHENEVER there is a takeover of one company by another, lawyers are invariably involved in drawing up contracts, heads of agreement and due diligence documents.

American prosecutors have discovered that a trio of bright Chinese hackers made a fortune by taking advantage of the very poor cyber security in many law firms and having gained easy access to numerous sites, they simply discovered information concerning a number of Having found out which companies were in merger and acquisition talks, they were able to purchase stocks in advance of public announcements and it is alleged that they made in excess of $4 million (€3.8 million) in profits.

Of the three men involved who are all from Macau, one has been arrested by Hong Kong police and will be extradited to the USA to face charges of conspiracy, insider trading, wire fraud and computer intrusion, whilst the other two although identified have not been found and there appears to have been no direct request to the Macau authorities to assist.

This revelation of a new target for cyber intruders has come as something of a wake-up call for corporate America and US State Attorney Preet Bharara who is prosecuting the case has warned law firms that they will continue to be vulnerable not only from external hacking but from internal manipulation unless their security is considerably improved.

According to the New York Times the trio had successfully hit seven different lawyers' firms during 2015 and had 'attacked' their sites and e-mail servers on more than 100,000 occasions with their profits coming from information concerning at least two major takeovers.

With accusations of the Russian government trying to influence the result of the latest Presidential Election through cyber manipulation and almost daily announcements of major banks and servers being hacked, it is possible that the activities that have been discovered are just the tip of an iceberg which could be more dangerous to international economies then ever imagined.

It is not just computers in offices that are at risk, with the increase of available information on tablet and Android smart phones, these are also becoming a major target for malware and hacking especially with the proliferation of apps from banks which allow for the payment of goods and services.

Trump advisor says relocations are inevitable

By Matthew Elliott

THE man who will be responsible for negotiating a free trade deal between Britain and the US has encouraged other countries to take advantage of the UK's post-Brexit vulnerability.

Billionaire businessman Wilbur Ross will be Donald Trump's chief of trade in the president-elect's new administration. He has said it was 'inevitable' that there would be 'relocations' and has urged Cyprus, Germany and Ireland to take full advantage of the

The investor, who will play a key role in determining the nature of Britain's transatlantic relations, described Brexit as a 'God-given opportunity' for London's financial rivals while addressing Cypriot bankers.

The revelations come amid a stream of developments related to Britain's post-Brexit trade prospects.

Ireland's future position as the only English-speaking country in the EU has reportedly seen more than 100 top companies inquire about relocating from London to Dublin.

The man in charge of attracting foreign investment to the Republic has claimed to have received a huge increase in interest from financial services companies keen to maintain access to the European market.

Head of the Irish Industrial Development Agency, Martin Shanahan, said that Ireland is particularly attractive to Asian and American companies. Especially those looking for a European base with access to the single market, proximity to the UK that speaks the language of business and has low corpora-

That places Ireland in prime position to make the most of Britain's likely withdrawal from the single market.

However if the former governor of the Bank of England is correct, Brexit could be positive for both the UK and Ireland.

Speaking to Radio 4 on Boxing Day, Lord King said that the UK could soon take advantage of 'real opportunities' to sign trade deals with other countries outside of the EU.

"Being out of what is a pretty unsuccessful European Union particularly in the economic sense - gives us opportunities as well as obviously great political difficulties," he told the pro-

"I think there are real question marks about whether it makes sense to remain in the customs union.

"Clearly if we do that we cannot make our own trade deals with other countries."

In the meantime, the Spanish National Council for Market Values is offering an advice service to British companies that want to invest in Spain but are scared of the bureaucracy and will supply English speaking advisors to explain Spanish laws and legal requirements.

The world is well rid of this man

HOW typical of that petulant pillock Obama to make Trump's accession to the White House as difficult as possible.

Why didn't he just leave the decisions as to what action to take against Russia to the new administration? Why? Because he wants to throw that final rattle out of the pram, that's why. The fact that his favourite white Nanny didn't win the election meant that the country was also delivering its verdict on his own pathetic Islamic sympathising regime.

And what a limp wrist 'retaliation' it turned out to be. The expulsion of 35 Russian diplomats, just before Christmas, merely resulted in disrupting a few family lives and ruining their holidays. Yeah. Nice one Obama. That really showed 'em who was boss. I wonder how many Iranians he would have expelled just before Eid!? And what a wonderful reaction Putin had to this final effort to deliver as much infantile nastiness as possible.

In true leadership fashion, not only did he not retaliate with the tit-for-tat childish nonsense Obama was no doubt expecting, he actually extended greetings and invitations to American diplomats and their families to join the Russian people in their celebrations and attend their Christmas and New Year shows at the Kremlin!

Onward and upward everyone, stay healthy, positive and above ground."

I'd like to have been a fly on the wall when Obama and his equally arrogant missus heard that one. I can hear the toys hitting the bedroom wall from here. No, the world is well rid of this man, who to my mind posed a serious threat to the safety of the

I know many have been sucked in by his apparent striving for world peace and unity, but I think that under all the rhetoric lurked an ulterior motive that, thank the Lord, with the demise of his chosen successor, will now be destroyed and consigned to the bin of dubious leaders, where it well and truly belongs.

HAVE you recovered yet? No, not from your annual boozathon, but from 2016. What a year for pollsters, pundits, bookies getting it wrong! First, Brexit, then Donald Trump. Yes, if only Michael Fish (remember him?) had been plying his trade last year, he'd have looked bang-on.

It's too early to say where 2016 will rank in modern world history compared with, say,1914 and 1939. But it was undoubtedly the most dramatic moment in British politics since the Second World War. Plus, the USA elected a president who publicly admitted he gropes women, doesn't pay taxes and, reportedly, summarised his future Republican supporters thus in People Magazine: "they believe anything... I could lie and they'd still eat it up." I mean, what do you have to do to be unelectable?

Add that to the deaths of so many celebrities, and it's difficult to see how 2017 could be any more 'surprising.' But then, consider what'll be happening. The Supreme Court ruling, the triggering of Article 50, Trump's inauguration, the French and German elections, Russian and Chinese expansionism, the next inevitable terrorist attack and our response to it. Maybe we're heading for more of the same - 2016 Mark II?

As wishes for 2017 go, mine are pretty modest. Of course, a complete end to war, disease and

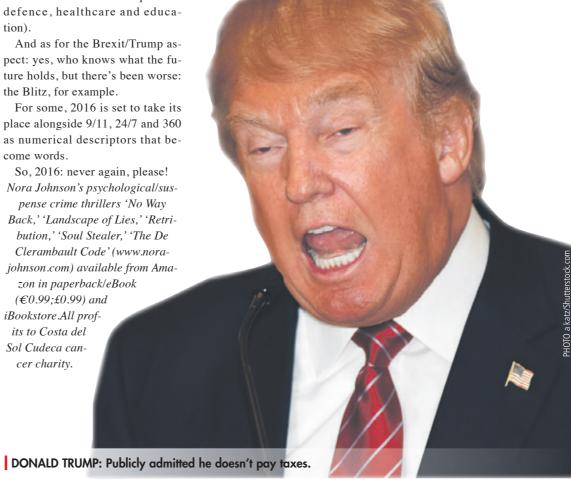

But if I can't have that, maybe I can have something a little easier to achieve: an open, grown-up and serious debate about the future of the NHS (not helped by recent news of foreign patients running up £30m of unpaid NHS bills in one year) and of the Government's foreign aid spending target of 0.7 per cent of GDP (despite some worthwhile projects, enormous sums of taxpayers' money are currently wasted and would be surely better allocated to hard-pressed defence, healthcare and educa-

And as for the Brexit/Trump aspect: ves. who knows what the future holds, but there's been worse: the Blitz, for example,

For some, 2016 is set to take its place alongside 9/11, 24/7 and 360 as numerical descriptors that become words.

LEGALLY SPEAKING

Paperwork needed

AS part of the series, we answer some common driving questions and keep you updated on the latest driving and road news kindly provided by members of the Guardia Civil based in Torrevieja, Costa Blanca, who set up the N332 website and Facebook page to help break down barriers.

IT is basic knowledge to know as soon as you get your car and start driving in Spain, but still many are not fully aware of what documents they should be carrying in the vehicle with them.

It is compulsory to carry certain documents with you in your vehicle and these include:

The ITV card. This is the official documents that relates to the technical inspection of the vehicle, or the ITV. Once your vehicle is four years old it will have to undergo this mandatory test and the vehicle will then be issued with the ITV report detailing what happened during the inspection. This report must also be carried in the vehicle.

Permiso de Circulacion. The Permiso de Circulacion is similar to a log book for the vehicle which contains information such as the number plate and vehicle owner.

Insurance Policy. Despite some being led to believe otherwise, carrying the insurance policy details in the vehicle is not compulsory by law as the information is contained on a central computer, however, in the case of an accident, it is advisable to have the paperwork to hand.

European Accident Agreement, Again, this is not compulsory, but it is advisable to carry a European Accident form as it will help you ensure data is recorded correctly in the event of an accident. They are available in various languages and are all laid out the same making it easier to deal with it if different nationalities are involved in an

It is also not compulsory to carry the information relating to the annual SUMA tax paid on the vehicle.

For the documents you carry, they must be the originals not photocopies. The only copy allowed are those that are stamped and certified by an official notary.

Reducing the size of our pool

I recently wrote to you regarding the reduction of our Community swimming pool. I showed your response to our Administrators but they refuse to accept that we only need a simple majority vote and insist that, because the pool is part of the original structure, there must be 100 per cent agreement by attendees at the meeting. Where can I find the legislation that makes this clear? Is it in the Horizontal Law? If so, which section?

S.K. (Costa del Sol)

The requirement for a unanimous vote is set out in Article 17, paragraph 6, of the Law of Horizontal Property. It says that any change which modifies the original Constitutional Title or Statutes requires a unanimous vote. It would be most unusual for the exact size of the swimming pool to be registered here. Nevertheless, it is possible, and so would require a unanimous vote in order to change its measurements. In any case, most lawyers prefer to see a unanimous vote for any major change, even when it is not strictly necessary. This may explain your Administrator's insistence.

9 hours and I have the hump

Mike Senker In my opinion Views of a Grumpy Old Man

'HAPPY New Year to you both' was the message I woke up to on New Year's Day. It was one of many that I had received on WhatsApp over the last few days. 'So what?' you may ask. Well, the difference with this one was it was just from a telephone number.

There was no name which meant this person was not in my contacts. I stared at it for a while and then decided the best way to deal with it was to politely respond by saying, 'Happy New Year to you too, but who is this?' Back comes the response ... 'it's Peter.'

Mystery solved you may think. Nothing is ever that simple with me as I still haven't got a clue who Peter is. Oh and to make matters worse it's an English number. Then the phone goes and the mystery number comes up. It's a WhatsApp call. 'Hello Michael? It's me Peter.' 'Sorry, Peter who?' 'Hello Michael.' 'Hello Peter.' Now we can't hear each other and he hangs up. I call back but there's no answer. I send a message and there's no answer and no blue ticks. So now I have got the raving hump and we are only nine hours into 2017 which has to be a record even for me. Good start. I'm peed off. Peter has obviously got the raving hump with me and will never speak to me again. Hey ho, off we go - another year under way.

I got a lovely poem from a reader called John Stevens about dodgy hosepipes. It is really good and I enjoyed it as I have one of the said hosepipes. It's the type that expands when you turn it on and contracts when you turn it off. His poem is all about how they split. Anyway nice poem, as I said, and I was going to read it on the radio. I also thought how unlucky he and his friends were as mine was fine... until today!

I don't have a tap on my balcony but do have lots of plants so I had a tap fixed under the sink in the bathroom. I then attach the hose and take it through the bedroom on to the terrace. Guess what happened today? IT SPLIT! Water was gushing everywhere. Rugs were soaked, the floor was soaked and it was an absolute disaster. How can it happen? What makes it split? John, did you ever find out what causes it? Is it the sun?

So before lunch on January 1, I've managed to get the hump with someone, whose only transgression was to wish me a Happy New Year, and flood my bedroom .You couldn't make this stuff up. Email me at mikesenker@gmail.com.

Cowboy builders come to Spain

LAST May I approached a kitchen business to find a reliable expert to lay a laminate floor in my villa. After an agreed quote this socalled expert carried out the work but within four weeks it had failed. After some trouble I managed to contact him through the kitchen business.

He returned to carry out repairs to the new floor at further cost to myself! In October the flooring developed further faults and since then I have called him five times and texted three times, but 'Yes' you've guessed it, 'No Reply'!

So I approached the kitchen business who first recommended this 'expert' to see if they would help to contact him but 'Yes' you've guessed it correctly again, 'two emails with no further replies from them'! I was advised to employ Spanish contractors but felt supportive towards Brits trying to run a business in another country!

I now have to employ another contractor to carry out repairs at further costs. We all know the pitfalls of being ripped off with poor workmanship, promises and lack of responsibilities towards those that pay good money to help keep them in business!!

My experience is a warning to others!

R J Gammon, Alicante

Weapons testing

THE testing of armaments has been going on from the beginning

According to reports in the newspapers, Russia has tested '162 types of modern armaments during the campaign in Syria.'

What is their ambition, to be the sole superpower? Some 80 years ago Nazi-Germany aimed at world dominance and certainly some testing was needed: aerial warfare was crucial.

Hitler's support of Franco gave the Luftwaffe the opportunity and Guernica paid the price and was destroyed.

At the Nuremberg trials Hermann Goring testified that "The Spanish Civil War gave me an opportunity to put my young air force to the test and a means for my men to gain experience."

TRAIN TRAVEL: Nationalisation could win an awful lot of votes.

Reasonable rail fares?

I GO to the UK fairly often and when I do I am forced to travel around by train. These journeys are relatively infrequent so I do not feel I am being taken advantage of by the cost.

But I do remember being a professional commuter and having to put up with dirty, uncomfortable trains that were late and too full. Is it beyond the wit of man to run a train service that provides a level of comfort at a reasonable price? I am a fan of the West Coast main line run by Virgin. Virgin isn't big enough to take over the whole network. I know it's been said before, but in my opinion nationalising the rail service would win a political party an awful lot

D Smith, Marbella

That ambition brought Germany

Meaningless death?

I AM too young to remember young men of conviction going to fight Franco's forces in the Spain of the 1930s.

Many died and everyone knows their efforts were ultimately futile. Why though are young men going to fight against Daesh in Syria?

For the same reasons?

I don't know, but it is all over the internet that a chef from Sussex appears to have been killed leaving his family with a tragedy on their hands.

Did his sacrifice achieve anything at all?

Brexit blues

LIKE most people I intend to tough it out and see what happens. Spain is my home now and to be honest I do not feel I have much in common with those who voted to leave the EU.

Maybe they don't care about people like me. One thing that does worry me is the number of EU citizens in the UK who say they have been subjected to abuse, just because they're not from the Almost all of them are holding down proper jobs and paying their taxes. And some are doing jobs I know that Brits wouldn't want to

One Spanish paper featured a young teacher who has returned from the UK because he said the atmosphere has changed. It is very sad when a teacher feels that strongly.

Roy L, Almeria

Planet plea

THE election of Donald Trump made me happy at first, someone who will shake up the system.

Honours compromised

WHY are we still giving honours to people who supply political parties with the most money?

I'm all for recognising the great and the good, but they have to deserve it. Knighthoods for civil servants nobody has heard of, gongs for cronies and even giving a knighthood to a sportsman when they're still young? None of that seems right to me.

Honours should rightly be for those who give service to their communities and there are plenty of these people. I worked with one for many years.

Maybe the system needs another

Fond farewell

ON the subject of people we lost in 2016, I would like to remember Alan Rickman.

He died of pancreatic cancer in January and is a great loss. He appeared, at least in public, to be a very unselfish man who was not bowled over by stardom. I watched the Harry Potter films and I'm too old for them, just because he was such a lovely actor. A great loss to all of us.

New Year's resolution - will you keep yours?

THIS week, millions of people will be making a promise to do an act of self-improvement from New Year's Day 2017.

But where did the tradition of making a New Year's resolution originate?

The idea can be traced back to the Babylonians who promised their gods that they would repay their debts and return borrowed objects. The Romans made promises to the god Janus, (after whom the month of January is named) and Medieval Knights took the 'Peacock Vow' to re-affirm their commitment to chivalry.

Today many religions observe periods of atonement by reflecting upon wrongdoings over the year and seeking forgiveness. The concept of a resolution, regardless of creed, is to reflect upon self-improvement annually.

Between 1940 and 2000 the number of American adults forming New Year's resolutions increased from 25 per cent to 45 per cent. Making a resolution actually improves the rate of success tenfold when compared to those who choose not to make resolutions. The most popular resolutions are to improve physical well-being by eating healthy food, losing weight, exercising more, stopping smoking, and drinking less alcohol. Sadly however, nearly 90 per cent of our resolutions fail.

The Mayo Clinic recently stated that "Hundreds of fad diets, weight-loss programmes and outright scams promise quick and easy weight loss. However, the foundation of successful weight loss remains a healthy, calorie-controlled diet combined with increased physical activity. For successful, long-term weight loss, you must make permanent changes in your lifestyle and health habits."

Having originated in 1984 Cambridge Weight Plan is certainly not a fad. By combining a balanced, scientifically proven, calorie controlled diet, with increased activity, our range of weight loss programmes are flexible enough to fit in with your own

Concern over antibiotic use for children

A STUDY has found that Spanish children are being prescribed more antibiotics than many other countries.

The study was carried out by the Foundation for the Promotion of Sanitary and Biomedical Research of the Region of Valencia (FISABIO), which is attached to the Department of Health, together with a consortium of German, Italian, Norwegian, Korean and American scientists.

They followed more than 74 million children from birth to 18 between 2008 and 2012 in what the Valencian

Government is calling the first and longest study ever carried out on antibiotic use between countries.

The results suggested that in the first two years of life, Spanish youngsters were being given up to 50 per cent more antibiotics than the Germans and Americans. The study found South Korea most frequently prescribed antibiotics followed by Italy and Spain, with Norway the low-

The concern is that over use of antibiotics can make youngsters become resistant to them and inappropriate use can lead to more problems.

FISABIO warned there needs to be more social awareness on the use of antibiotics in Spain and paediatricians should be the first to act by reducing the number of prescriptions issued.

Some tips for a healthy new year

SPECIALIST: Doctor Luis Perez Belmonte.

HEALTH is a very important matter which everyone should keep in mind, and it is very much influenced by our lifestyle. There are a series of measures which can be taken to help us feel better and noticeably improve our health for a healthier 2017. These are the main points we should concentrate on to improve our health:

- 1. Diet: the saying "we are what we eat" is very true. Following a balanced diet which is rich in fruit and vegetables and limits meat, especially red meat, favouring fish instead will help us to maintain an optimal state of health as it helps reduce the amount of 'bad' fat and sugars we eat. All of this is included in the Mediterranean diet, which has been proven to be the healthiest.
- 2. Physical exercise: to keep our bodies fit and help out mental health, it is vital to carry out moderate daily physical exercise. An example of exercise would be walking or jogging for 30 to 60 minutes, depending on the person's level of fitness, every day or at least five days per week.
- 3. Avoid tobacco and alcohol: tobacco is extremely toxic and should be avoided in all its forms Regarding alcohol, it is healthy to drink one or two glasses of red wine per day, but stronger alcoholic drinks should be saved for special occa-

- 4. Avoid being overweight/obese: if we follow a healthy diet and maintain a good level of physical exercise, we will manage to keep our weight under control and stay healthy, reducing our risk of suffering diabetes, high blood pressure, high cholesterol or heart attacks among other things. Staying at a healthy weight also avoids putting excess strain on our joints.
- 5. Control stress: it has been proven that people who are subjected to a lot of stress, either at work or in their personal lives, suffer worse health and are at risk of serious illnesses. Stressful situations should be avoided as much as possible.
- 6. Sleep: decent sleep is essential to strengthen the body and mind. Avoid heavy meals, alcohol and stressful situations before bedtime to ensure a good night's sleep.

Finally, it's the end of an era

By Matthew Elliott

A SURVEY of some of the world's top property experts has found that the majority believe that 2017 will be the year the extraordinary London price boom finally comes to an end.

Conducted by The Times, the poll found that 22 out of 39 leading economists reckoned the show was over for the British capital. Most alarmingly some even anticipated prices dropping by a hefty 10 per cent. Prime central London areas have already dropped by up to 13 per cent in 2016 while the JP Morgan analyst thought a city-wide 7 per cent fall is likely this

The survey confirms the expectations outlined in a report from the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors. It forecast a stalling of growth across the UK, a development that would fly in the face of over a decade of sharply rising prices.

House prices in the capital hit an average of more than €0.5 million in 2016, up from less than €300,000 in 2006.

LONDON PROPERTY: Many professionals are now leaving the capital for cheaper pastures.

The reasons for the expected price fall this year are many, but fortunately for the rest of Britain mainly revolve around London itself. Having been priced out of the market for too long, many professionals are now abandoning the expensive capital

A pioneering accessible home, specifically designed for people with reduced mobility, has just finished a tour across the nation. The three-month journey through 15 Spanish cities allowed roughly 30,000 people to see the accessible home of the future with their own

Everything from bathroom design to faucets, floor material, corridor width, bed height, windows, drawers and doorbells is adapted specially for the homeowner. More importantly designs are flexible, meaning the slightest of changes can make winter a little easier to bear.

The home marks the entry into the property market of new architectural companies and opportunities and a growing wave of mobilityfriendly homes. It has taken a surprisingly long time, especially as there is such a strong demand across Spain and in expat communities.

It is thought that more than half of the estimated 3.25 million disabled people have serious trouble moving around their own homes.

More startling is the fact less than a quarter of homes are considered accessible to the disabled. Fortunately, that looks set to change

Terrific year lies ahead for Spain

THE year 2017 is set to be the one where the Spanish property market finally consolidated the astounding gains of recent years and embraced a new model of stability and sustainability.

House prices are expected to see strong growth of around 6 per cent, surpassing the just over 3 per cent seen in 2016. Barcelona and Madrid are set to become major hotspots on the luxury and commercial scenes. While the Costas and Islands are set to attract even more foreign buyers than ever before.

That all bodes well for homeowners across Spain, or anyone interested in buying a property. Especially as the country has learned the lessons of the past and the market has adapted to become more dynamic, transparent and open to foreign Optimism has also taken root in the tremendous volume of information requests in different online portals like Kyero, bolstered by Spain's frequent appearances on British television shows, including A Place in the Sun and Love Island.

Already in 2016, foreign buyers accounted for some 20 per cent of transactions in the Spanish property market. If the forecasts are anything to go buy, that percentage is set to jump even higher this

Going for the big one

Cassandra Nash

A weekly look

- and not entirely impartial reaction - to the Spanish political scene

MARIANO RAJOY and Spain's Right Wing have not made it easy for ETA to make its peace with society.

The Basque terrorist organisation ceased armed activity in October 2011 and of the five parties in the Basque regional parliament, only the Partido Popular does not back a non-government bill dissolving ETA and decommissioning its weapons.

The Basque president Iñigo Urkullu would like to see the regional PP swallow its misgivings and support the bill. The last ETA attack occurred in France in 2010 and Urkullo believes that Rajoy now needs to pool Spain's resources in fighting the big one: jihadism.

The jihadis do not differentiate between the Left, the Right or Centre and that goes for nationalists, too.

Take your pick

PRESIDENT of the Spanish government Mariano Rajoy has always disappointed Jose Maria Aznar, the former president who nominated him as his successor. Not only are the two men chalk and cheese, but Aznar has admitted that his first choice turned him down twice. And who was that? None other than Rodrigo Rato, the former vice-president and Hacienda minister who is now on trial for money-laundering, embezzlement and fraud.

This includes €2.8 million the former minister allegedly left off his tax returns to Hacienda. Rajoy might not say much for Aznar's good judgement, but Rato says even less.

Tread carefully

THE Podemos party hasn't been around long but its foundations are already shifting.

Iñigo Errejon, a Podemos party founder and currently its number two, did the unthinkable by challenging Podemos supremo Pablo Iglesias. In a panicky bid to shortcircuit Errejon and silence debate, the Iglesias faction has unleashed a campaign to weaken him. Instead the plan could backfire by confirming the doubts of those already dubious about Iglesias. And it could summon support for baby-faced Errejon who is infinitely more adult than pony-trailed ego-tripping

Gender typing

DESPITE stringent equality laws and politicians' insistence on referring to niños y niñas instead of the collective ninos, some things remain the same in Spain. This was plain to see as small children played with their presents in Spain's squares and gardens on Christmas Day and will do so on January 6 as little girls push dolls' prams and small boys career on skateboards and scooters. Clearly Father Christmas and the Three Kings haven't taken in the equality message.

Following the royal path at El Chorro

By Eleanor Hawkins

NORTH of Malaga, between Ardales and Alora, there is a unique trail, the Caminito del Rey (King's Walkway), which is attracting people from all over the world to its dizzying heights.

The walkway was originally built early in the 19th century by the Hydroelectric Society of El Chorro to provide access for maintenance workers and guards and to transport materials. In 1921 King Alfonso XIII presided over the official inauguration of the reservoirs in the area and either walked along or at least visited the trail, leading locals to begin referring to it as the King's Walkway.

Once considered the most dangerous mountain trail in the world, where four unfortunate adventurers lost their lives on its narrow, unprotected ledges in 1999 and 2000. the Caminito has now been completely renovated and safely opened up to the pub-

Altogether the trail consists of 7.7 kilometres, of which 2.9 kilometres run along walkways suspended from the sides of gorges and dangling over heart-stopping drops. The walk takes between three and four hours from one end to the other and is currently only possible from north to south, beginning at the Ardales end and ending at the Alora end. There is a bus service to return to the car park at the beginning with tickets priced at €1.55 per person.

To visit the Caminito walkers must obtain tickets (€10 each) in advance. The trail is generally open every day except Mondays, extreme weather conditions may cause the trail to be closed down for safety reasons, in which case tickets are exchanged for another date. Children under the age of eight are not allowed onto the trail for safety reasons, and the management recommends visitors read the information available on the website (www.caminitodel rev.ino/en) before their visit.

While the new, improved trail is safe and suitable for non-athletes, it does include slopes, steps and ramps and is not suitable for wheelchairs or the very unfit. Also, with its walkways hugging cliffsides, narrow passes and a 105-metre high suspended bridge, those who suffer from vertigo may not find it enjoySPONSORED BY

Growing artichokes can be fun

By Graeme Tyrrell

WINTER is truly upon us with the days short to find time in the garden. At least watering is no longer the issue as it is in summer. A good way to reduce your time in the vegetable garden is to plant perennial plants that will produce for several years.

A favourite for thousands of years in the Mediterranean is the artichoke. It is well recorded in Greek and Roman times in medical journals for digestive problems, including lack of libido and is included in Greek mythology, with the artichoke originating from the exploits of the greek god Zeus.

The botanical name is Cynara scolymus from which cynara is a derivative of the greek name for artichoke, kynara. and scolymus indicates it is a thistle.

It is thought to have been evolved through cultivation of the Cardoon, as artichokes do not occur naturally in the wild. The Cardoon is a thistle type vegetable and the stem of the leaf is used as the edible part. Cardoon has lost its popularity due to the long preparation time to remove the bitterness by blanching the stem in the garden and extra time to peel and cook despite its delicious taste and ease of growing in warm climates.

The artichoke part we normally eat is, like capers, a flower bud. They are ready when the flower receptacle is fully swollen and heavy but still compact with the parts closed and they squeak when form a large spectacular mauve/purple thistle like flower. They are sometimes grown just for their attractive foliage and flowers as a border or feature plant.

Artichokes grow well with good soil preparation placed about a metre apart and will produce well for around five years before needing to be dug up and divided to gain maximum benefit. Division is the removal of small offshoots replace the old ones or to give to friends.

If the tips of the artichoke buds start to show browning tips when forming, it is an indication the plant has passed its premium quality produce time and should be replaced.

They prefer soil that is a sandy loam but adding compost to the natural soils in Spain and fertilising with nutrients high in potash will assist with bud formation.

grow artichoke

plants, the stem of the leaf, called bracts or chard can also be eaten like the cardoon, so its use is not limited to the buds. Artichoke chard is not generally available in shops but is delicious when prepared using traditional recipes from Sicily and regions of Italy and Spain.

January tasks for the garden

JANUARY is a relatively quiet month for gardeners, with the main tasks consisting of protecting plants from cold and starting to plant for the spring.

Household plants should be checked to ensure they are not being dried out by heating and those in flower should be watered more often than usual. It is a good idea to combat dry air by increasing humidity.

Outdoors, it is time to start planting the vibrant plants which will flower in the spring, seasonal bushes and fruit trees. If puddles are a problem, dig drainage channels to avoid plants standing in water and remember although those planted directly in the ground will thrive on rain water, those in pots dry out quicker so may still need watering occa-

Keep lawns longer than usual to protect the ground from cold and, in the case of frost, do not walk on the grass as it will not regenerate in frozen conditions.

Prune rose bushes and ornamental trees.

In the vegetable garden, tomatoes, beetroot, leeks, peas, onions, radishes, celery, peppers, aubergines, garlic, spinach, carrots and lettuce can now be planted.

Top kitchen trends for 2017

IF you're thinking of renovating your kitchen this year, there are a variety of new trends which are set to be firm favourites this year.

Industrial style

Practical kitchen areas with an industrial style are becoming all the range as a change to modern fitted kitchens. Their key elements combine exposed features including brick walls and beams with understated cabinets, metallic appliances and exposed pipes, all highlighted by reclaimed or imitation factory light fittings.

Modern but classic

Those old favourites, Shaker kitchens, are still all the rage and can be combined with country-style accessories or high-tech gadgetry to vary the final effect.

For a modern take on the traditional style, use plain wood and pale paint to lighten the effect. Whereas in the past Shaker units could be pricey, there are now versions available for all budgets and a sleek, modern worktop on top will be the perfect finishing touch.

A brightly coloured kitchen range between the light coloured cabinets will create an eye-catching focal point, and hide your appliances behind doors.

Bold and brave

Playing it safe is out of fashion. Bold, brave colours are the latest way of saying it with your kitchen and there is a wide range of tones, patterns and textures on the market with something to suit every personality.

MODERN TAKE: Use plain wood and pale paint to lighten the effect.

Dulux's Colour of the Year for 2017 is denim, and blues and greys are still in favour although darker shades are coming into fashion.

Those not quite ready to go all the way can opt for more traditional toned cabinet doors and add splashes of bold colour in tiles or work surfaces, or by adding the odd coloured door to break up a monotonous wall.

Those in search for something chic and streamlined have an endless range of high-gloss finishes for a modern look. Clean lines, handle-free doors and lots of hidden storage space to hide clutter and keep everything slick and tidy combine perfectly with the latest in gadgets and equipment.

VISITING THE VET: Many prefer to examine their patients on a table.

IT is essential that all dogs are regularly inoculated and wormed, that is: inoculations and boosters every year, worming treatments every three months. The only effective worming products are available from your vets.

Many pet owners encounter problems at the vet. The dogs and cats do not like to be examined. From an early age make it a pleasant experience for your pet to be handled and examined by different people. Always do this while you are present to reassure and reward the dog with praise and 'titbits.' Only ask sensible people, who are used to dogs to assist you with this exer-

Some if not most vets prefer to examine their patients on a table. So if you have a dog that can be lifted onto a suitable table, get the dog used to being put on the table. Hold him in a comfortable position for a few seconds. praising him and reassuring him, then give him a 'titbit' and gently lift him off.

Never let a dog jump off the table by himself. If you use a table make sure a mat or cover is placed on it so that it is not slippery for the dog. There is no quicker way to make a dog hate being picked up and put on a table than to place it on a slippery surface.

Do not give dogs any medicine unless prescribed by a vet.

Administering prescribed

Often following a visit to your vet you will be required to continue a course of treatment at home. This can include: giving pills or liquid medicine (orally); applying ointments to eyes, ears and skin: giving eve or ear drops.

The only reason dogs object to taking medicine is that they are not used to being handled. It is kinder to prepare your dog to the best of your ability for the occasion when this will probably arise. This is best done by training your dog to allow you to handle it and examine any part of its body under any circumstances without any resistance from your dog.

Pills can often be given by disguising the pill inside a little piece of butter, margarine or cheese. There are many 'Do Not's' associated with this sort of training, all of which are common sense.

Do not give dogs any medicine unless specifically prescribed for that dog by a vet. If in doubt about your dog's health, consult a vet, never take advice from unqualified people; this includes pet shops, dog breeders, dog trainers, behaviourists and the person a friend knows who had a dog with the same sort of symptoms.

Do not put anything in your dog's ear. Look, don't poke! Report discharges or smells to your vet. Do not put any drops or ointment into your dog's eyes. Consult your vet. Do not interfere with any lumps, bumps, wounds, cysts, rashes or anything else on your dog's body. Consult your vet.

supply is vital for hamsters

SMALL and relatively cheap and easy to keep. hamsters have been a popular pet for many years.

Unlike mice, hamsters are not particularly interested in having company apart from making more hamsters, so can be kept individually without any major problems. They are nocturnal and tend to sleep most of the day before racing about

Essential equipment for hamster owners consists of a cage, exercise wheel, water bottle, food dish and

While snazzy cages with mazes of plastic tubes look cool and are loved by children, they are not the best bet as they are difficult to keep clean and can also cause problems if a chubby hammy gets stuck in a narrow tube.

Exercise wheels should be made of solid plastic, rather than old-fashioned wire ones which can easily cause injury.

Grass hay, hamster pellets and fresh veg are all a hamster needs to stay well-fed and healthy. Beware, however, that they love to stash food away which can quickly lead to rotting vegetables so take care to search out and remove these stashes frequently. Sticks or chew toys are vital as the rodents' teeth grow constantly and need wearing down and, like all pets, a constant supply of fresh

> There are many different types of bedding available but be aware that litters which clump can cause digestive problems and softwood shavings can cause respiratory disease.

As hamsters do not tend to be smelly animals, shredded paper is the best option for bedding.

Hamsters generally keep themselves wellgroomed so only those with long hair will need occasional grooming with a soft brush. Gentle handling from an early age will be enough to train a hamster as an affectionate pet, but avoid waking them up during the day to stop them from getting Abbeygate FOR BEST RATES IN MOTOR INSURANCE CALL: 952 89 33 80

A fierce fighting bull

By Matthew Elliott

A GRAND tour celebrating 50 years of the Lambourghini Miura somewhat surprisingly finished up on an Andalucian farm. After 12 months of touring Europe's glamour spots, from Monte Carlo to Madrid, the tour rolled to a stop at a renowned but off-the-beaten track bull-breeding farm in the Spanish hinterlands.

It would be surprising if not for the interesting fact that Miura is actually the word used to describe a fierce fighting bull from the famous ranch. The farm is owned by the sons of a man who inspired the great Ferruccio Lamborghini to call his new model the Miura and make 50 years of motoring history while he was at it.

Produced between 1966 and 1973 the Miura was the fastest production car in history when first unleashed in the new sports car era. It was one of the first cars to trailblaze the mid-engined two-seat layout and became a global phenomenon after starring in the opening credits to The Italian Job in 1969.

As well as the grand tour, 2016 also saw the release of the Aventador Miura Homage. The Miura bulls of Andalucia are said to be intelligent, fierce, and overwhelmingly powerful. A fitting name then if ever there was one

An electric rip-off

A REPORT found that British electric car-owners are paying well over the odds to recharge their batteries. Some of the new public charging stations charge upwards of €15 for an hour of driving, making it far more expensive than refuelling with petrol or diesel.

The problem is a lack of consistency. Some points are free, others dirt cheap, and some eye-wateringly expensive. There are now thousands of public points across the UK and the government is planning to establish pric-

Once something of an oddity, electric cars are now quite commonplace on British streets and even motorways. By the end of 2018 estimates place the likely number at over 100,000, up from only around 3,000 just five years ago.

Megane Dynamique S Nav

THE battle for car sales is at its most intense in the family hatchback sector dominated by the likes of the Ford Focus and Volkswagen Golf - but there are other strong contenders.

Among them is the new Renault Megane, which scores well for standard equipment levels, load space and its pleasing driving dynamics.

All versions come with alloy wheels, Bluetooth, and air-conditioning, with entry level pricing from £16,950 (€20,066). Mid range Dynamique models add sat-nav, parking sensors, reversing camera, climate control, auto lights and wipers and larger 17 inch alloys as extras.

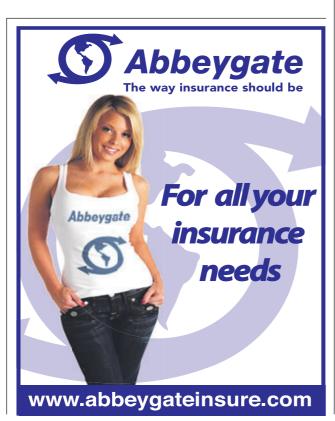

There's a choice of petrol engines and two diesels, 1.5-litre and 1.6-litre units. My Dynamique S Nav test model came with the 110 hp 1.5 litre diesel engine and priced at £20,400 (€24,155).

As soon as you get behind the wheel, you find it easy to get a comfortable driving position thanks to multi-adjustable driver's seat and reach and rake adjustable steering wheel.

The exterior restyling of the car provides a sporty low-slung look and the bonnet features a larger Renault badge and reshaped grille.

In the cabin, there is a smarter, more classy look to the

Russian athletes must be clean

RUSSIAN athletes hoping to compete again after the IAAF-imposed ban over state-sponsored doping, must prove they are clean the sport's world body has said.

A report found that more than 1,000 Russians, some of whom were medallists, benefited from the doping programme.

Only one Russian athlete was allowed to compete in the Rio Olympic Games following the old guide-

It also demands they reveal whether any coach, doctor or other support person they have worked with has been implicated in the

They must provide records of previous testing and submit to having any samples re-examined.

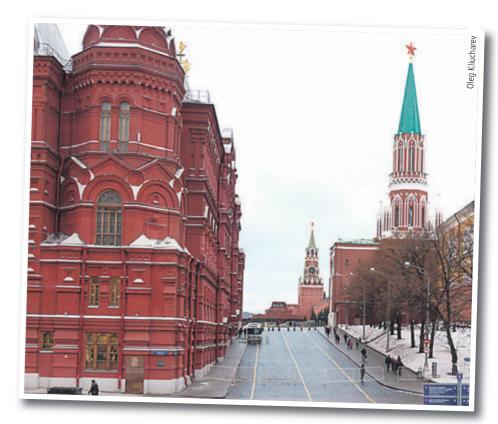

The IAAF will then send the applications to its Doping Review Board for review, who will also decide whether the athletes can compete again.

Russia's ban has been extended meaning they will be unable to compete in March's European Indoors competition in Belgrade, Serbia.

The Kremlin initially attacked the findings of the IAAF but has now admitted that state-sponsored doping took place. It denies however, that any high-ranking officials took part.

Chairman of the IAAF, Lord Coe said Russia's athletes had been "let down by a system that should have protected them."

THE KREMLIN: Initially attacked the findings.
